Passion with intent

In this, our 40th year as The Wilderness Society, we’re harnessing the passion of our members, supporters and staff to feed into a considered strategic plan that will deliver positive outcomes for some of our most important campaigns yet.

We do this with the confidence of an organisation that has celebrated many great past successes to inspire our current ambitious campaign goals.

Our current strategic plan came into effect in May 2015 and covers our work until the end of 2017. It’s about a modern and multifaceted approach to campaigning that addresses climate change and protects nature. It’s about innovating to stay ahead of the curve through supporter retention and growth. And it’s about engaging, organising and mobilising a broad church of people who care about nature and want to leave a habitable world for generations to come.

On a governance level, this is supported through regular reporting based on measurable outcomes so we’re able to stay agile and responsive in a constantly evolving landscape.

And we’re already starting to see the benefits of this refreshed approach to our work across the board.

The last financial year was one of great progress for the organisation, with highlights including:

- Successfully launching Movement For Life — our state-of-the-art community organising training program
- Commencing implementation of a new customer relationship management system
- Making significant inroads into our campaigns addressing climate change and nature protection

We’re excited to share with you the results of our work from the past financial year as we continue to build rigour and success into every layer of The Wilderness Society.

Lyndon Schneiders
National Campaigns Director

“Taking the fight for the Great Australian Bight to the floor of the BP Annual General Meeting in London this past April was a highlight. It reminded me of how my mentors inspired me upon my environmental campaigning path — the late Rick Farley, the late Greg Sargent, Fiona MacFarlane, Nicky Hungerford and Don Henry.

Now I’m watching the growth of the community organising training program inspire thousands of Australians to make a real difference by becoming advocates in their own local communities. It’s a challenging and exciting time, participating in the groundswell of momentum to create new, strong national environment laws and new, trusted independent institutions to administer those laws to protect nature.”

Lyndon has been instrumental to the success of our campaigns since he joined us in 1993. He’s completed study in politics, public policy, government and Australian history at the University of Queensland. He offers a valued perspective on building movements and growing influence in the social, political and environmental spaces. His leadership has contributed towards many of our most significant achievements, including the protection of native forests in Queensland, Tasmania and Victoria; three million hectares of Cape York being returned to Traditional Owners; stopping the James Price Point gas plant in the Kimberley; and keeping BP out of the Great Australian Bight.

Preserving wilderness and nature across Australia by creating protected areas and strong, nationally consistent laws and institutions.

Australia is one of the most biodiverse continents on Earth. Since we saved the iconic Franklin River from being dammed 40 years ago, our mission has continued so that the important ecosystems and habitats that we’re lucky enough to enjoy are protected for good.

We’re doing this on a number of fronts, with a consistent narrative around preventing the rollback of environmental laws across the country and advocating for new laws and approaches underscoring all of our work. We’ve taken a leadership role in the creation and operation of the Places You Love Alliance — Australia’s biggest ever alliance of environmental groups — which is campaigning for the overhaul of our existing national environment laws.

This year, the alliance convened an expert panel of Australian environmental lawyers, academics and experts in the field who are developing groundbreaking proposals to improve and strengthen our existing national environmental laws. We have gained extensive media coverage of the need for new laws in the pages of The Australian, The Guardian and The Huffington Post.

We’re aiming to preserve great swathes of land and marine areas right across the country. In Western Australia, we’ve worked hard over several years to finally convince the state government to protect large areas of the world famous Kimberley wilderness coast as marine parks. Our proposal looks like a major new national park declared around the iconic Horizontal Falls and four new marine parks declared or nearing completion in the Kimberley, which will bridge the current gaps in protection to complete the Great Kimberley Marine Park.

Further south, we’re working to protect the largest remaining intact temperate woodland on Earth — the Great Western Woodlands — from threats such as mining in the Helena Aurora Ranges and large-scale land clearing. We’re seeking strong commitments from major political parties in the lead up to next year’s state election.

We’re also securing protection for places such as Tasmania’s famous forests and Victoria’s Central Highlands, as well as East Gippsland. We’ve been calling for the creation of the Great Forest National Park north-east of Melbourne — and, as a result, the Victorian Government created the Victorian Forests Taskforce, aiming to protect forests and reform the logging industry.

In Tasmania, we continue to campaign for the permanent protection of 400,000 hectares of forests earmarked by the Tasmanian Forest Agreement, which was signed between the logging industry, environmental groups, unions and local communities in 2013. We succeeded in stopping dead a Tasmanian Government proposal to kick-start rainforest logging in the existing Tasmanian Wilderness World Heritage Area, following an intervention from the World Heritage Committee.

Furthermore, we’re concentrating our efforts on the Tarkine wilderness in Tasmania’s north west to stave off dual threats from logging and mining, with the long-term goal of achieving well-deserved World Heritage protection within the next decade. This is of great importance, as the Tarkine is Australia’s largest tract of temperate rainforest. As a result of the strong relationships that exist with the more progressive sections of the Tasmanian timber industry — developed during the negotiation of the Tasmanian Forest Agreement — we’ve been able to work together to delay proposals by the state government to recommence logging within the Tarkine’s boundaries.

Our advocacy for stronger land clearing laws in both New South Wales and Queensland continues to gather momentum, as rates of clearing spiral out of control — putting both biodiversity and climate change efforts at risk. We generated national media attention about the horrific land clearing operations across the two states; we held rallies and protests; we released groundbreaking research drawing links between clearing and its impacts on national climate change policies and emissions reduction targets; and we participated in parliamentary inquiries. The bill to reinstate land clearing laws was narrowly voted down in Queensland’s Parliament, so we’re launching a major new campaign to protect forests and bushlands throughout the whole of Queensland to protect wildlife and the carbon stocks that are held by trees, grasses and soils.
People and nature rely on a safe climate. We know that continuing to extract and burn fossil fuels and clear carbon-rich forests at the current rate will lead to catastrophic climate change. That’s why we’ve made climate action the cornerstone of our campaigning.

Australia is one of the world’s largest coal exporters and is positioning itself to become the largest global exporter of fossil fuels. There are large-scale coal, gas and oil projects proposed from one end of the country to the other. If all of this coal, oil and gas is exploited, Australia could chew up as much as one-half of the global emissions budget.

In December 2015, progress was made at the Paris Climate talks resulting in an international agreement to limit warming by 2°C, but we can do better. All signatories to the agreement should be aiming for 1.5°C to keep the Pacific region habitable, the Great Barrier Reef flourishing, and give our children a safe climate future.

Our Climate Action campaign aims to keep as great a volume of fossil fuels in the ground as possible, limiting Australia’s contribution to climate change. Here’s how we’re achieving this goal.

Recently, BP ditched its plans to deepwater drill for oil in the Great Australian Bight. While this happened outside of the last financial year, it’s important to recognise the work that led to this momentous victory:

- Extensive and damning oil spill modelling outcomes
- Local, national and international alliances
- National and international media coverage
- A clear and effective corporate engagement strategy to influence company boards
- A robust legal and regulatory strategy

We’re also developing and delivering a national approach to opposing fracking campaigns and future fossil fuel development, such as the local campaigns to address the threats to the Canning, Channel Country and Gunnedah Basins.

The Great Australian Bight is a key campaign in addressing the dual threats of climate change and the risk of irreversible environmental damage. Big Oil and gas companies are lining up to exploit the vast reserves of oil and gas found under the wild, pristine waters of the Bight, so we’ve been standing shoulder-to-shoulder with local communities to repel these advances. We’ve made encouraging progress on a number of fronts, particularly against BP, but the fight is far from over — with other oil giants, such as the US-based Chevron Corporation, scheduled to commence exploration drilling in 2018.

Our campaign in the Pilliga is carried out in tandem with a passionate and enlivened rural community. It’s in this massive inland forest — an important recharge zone for the Great Artesian Basin — where Santos plans to develop a coal seam gas field. Earlier in the year, due to a number of external pressures, the project was valued to be virtually worthless. We continue to employ strategies of shareholder pressure, legal support and lobbying until the threat is no more.

Our Climate Action campaign aims to keep as great a volume of coal, oil and gas in the ground as possible, in an effort to limit Australia’s contribution to global, catastrophic climate change.

We’re in a race to keep as great a volume of coal, oil and gas in the ground as possible, in an effort to limit Australia’s contribution to global, catastrophic climate change.

Jaxon engaged with our local community campaign to protect the forests of the Great Otways National Park in his late teens. In his eight years with us, he’s directly inspired nearly 3,000 people to join our movement, raising over $1.3 million towards our environmental campaigns. Recently, Jaxon’s work has included the win in the Bight, and the successful campaign to stop a proposed gas hub from being built at James Price Point in the Kimberley.

Jaxon is a Community Organiser at The Wilderness Society.
We've developed and are delivering a national community organising training program to all staff across the organisation. This includes a program to deliver not only community organising training to our supporters but ‘train the trainer’ workshops as well, in order to build a true grassroots movement that cares for nature.

Designed to put the power back in the hands of the people, Movement For Life offers members and supporters the opportunity to empower themselves and others through training. By joining a community of passionate local leaders, we can all harness the momentum required for real environmental change.

Internally, all organisers are attending training on the use and capability of the newly built customer relationship management system. All work, activities and relationships towards community organising objectives are being tracked and recorded.

We’re pioneering this community organising training program in the not-for-profit sector in Australia, so here’s how we’re bringing it to life:

- All Wilderness Society staff are taken through the community organising training program.
- The National Organising Team builds strategy to engage local, regional and national audiences.
- The community organising training program is rebranded as Movement For Life.
- A coordinated public launch of Movement For Life at events across all campaign centres takes place.
- Significant effort goes towards achieving maximum turn-out for the launch, in addition to digital promotion.
- Over 100 volunteers make more than 4,000 phone calls with nearly 1,400 people invited to launch.
- Attendees are actively signed up by volunteer training graduates on the night.
- As a result of the launch, 250+ people commit to training.
- House parties — our next phase of Movement For Life — are launched to engage activists and build our movement through social influence.
- The movement grows!

Damian Ogden
National Community Organising Manager

“I was inspired to join the team at The Wilderness Society by their rich grassroots history and culture. The ambitious goals of our national movement building strategy have the potential to create transformative change for the environment. I'm so proud to have been part of the Movement For Life launch in April. Bringing together hundreds of supporters in the one space, motivated and ready to organise their local community — what an incredible moment.”

Damian is a seasoned campaigner with an outstanding list of achievements, including contributing to the 2008 and 2012 Barack Obama Presidential campaigns, and founding and becoming the former Executive Director of Campaign Action. He’s advised more than 600 candidates running for public office and helped produce over 7,500 graduates of community organising and campaigning training. Damian holds a Bachelor of Arts and Law degree from the University of Sydney, is a fellow with the School for Social Entrepreneurs and graduate of the Harvard Kennedy School leadership program.
Engaging hearts and minds

Our message is at its most powerful when it has the ability to genuinely engage an audience. That’s why we’re ensuring our communications break out of the expected norm to expand our reach — and grow our movement.

Our brand has been built on talking to a committed core group of people from day one. Now, we need to significantly broaden our support base and the impact of our campaigns to enliven and sustain a mass movement and motivate public action.

Through an increased focus on our internal creative processes and the addition of creative roles within the communications department, we now have a greater ability to generate a high standard of strategic work that appeals to a wider audience. This means we have the resources and skill sets in-house to produce sophisticated strategic campaigns, as well as being nimble enough to react to opportunities that inevitably arise.

We’re forging ahead with a number of big picture projects to increase our brand recognition and the reach of our communications. Practically speaking, this looks like developing an internal team engagement and workflow process so that communications advice, strategy and production is delivered in a streamlined and organised way.

We’re also initiating scoping and strategy to deliver a new website.

Rob Beamish
National Creative and Communications Director

“I’m proud to be part of an organisation with a genuine commitment to building a mass movement of people from all walks of life. Urgent social change needs this incredibly broad support. I don’t know of another environmental NGO that’s as committed to preaching beyond the converted.

“Launching our community organising training program, Movement For Life, was a significant moment in the last year. We successfully recruited as many attendees from outside our core supporter group as from within it. Another major focus was creating sophisticated and agile communications to raise awareness of the threat being posed to the Great Australian Bight by BP, and applying pressure and scrutiny to the industry regulator, NOPSEMA.”

Rob joined us in his senior leadership appointment in May 2015 after building an impressive portfolio in the world of advertising and film as a Creative Director. He’s worked at many of Australia’s best ad agencies and has been awarded at all of the world’s leading advertising festivals. However, he was passionate about working for organisations (such as Scope, Quit and Berry Street) on social and behavioural change projects. Rob’s interdisciplinary approach — he completed degrees in both law and commerce — grounds his abilities to steer our brand towards engaging, relevant and compelling messaging, ensuring we’re expanding our reach and growing our movement every day.

Cutting through

A cross-section of work.

Movement For Life

We came up with the creative concept and branding behind our game-changing community organising training program. If Movement For Life sounds like an ambitious name, that’s because it is. Ultimately, we’re giving people a platform to get organised and build a movement that creates a better quality of life for us all.

We know that people power works, and Movement For Life offers members and supporters the opportunity to empower themselves and others.

Social channels

Our social media presence has grown exponentially in the past year, particularly on Facebook. We have 55,000 new followers, with our average reach per post being 95,000 people and our single biggest post reaching over 1.2 million people. We’ve better integrated our social media with other communications channels too, with successful submission, petition and fundraising campaigns driven from our Facebook page. Through strategic targeting, we’re now reaching new audiences through social media that we previously couldn’t reach.

Best Minister in the World

As land clearing rates soared in Eastern Australia — and seriously pushed up our carbon emissions — our former Federal Environment Minister, Greg Hunt, was off receiving an award for ‘Best Minister in the World’. We couldn’t pass up the opportunity to highlight this, so we commissioned an artist to paint Greg’s portrait to commemorate his award. We headed up to Canberra to deliver it to him personally but had a bit of trouble finding him. It found a (temporary) home in the National Portrait Gallery instead. Very apt.

#87 Days

The purpose of this campaign was to create awareness in Australia around the risks involved with BP deepwater drilling in the Great Australian Bight. Over the course of 87 days, we re-enacted in real time the fallout from BP’s catastrophic Deepwater Horizon oil spill disaster. Every day, we shared a real news story that followed the developments of the spill, and we encouraged people to add an overlay to their Facebook profile photos as a show of support.

#87 Days

Deepwater drilling. Not in the right.

#87 Days

Public awareness grew significantly and people power kicked into overdrive. Over the 87 days we were able to garner over 200,000 signatures online; a number far exceeding our expectations. It achieved its goal of placing the Great Australian Bight on the map and raising our profile.

#87 Days

We’ve already been recognised internationally in the advertising world with two Cannes Lions and one Clio award to date and have been awarded one of the FourAwards in the communication campaign category. We’re currently being considered for another Clio award.

#87 Days

Our work has been featured twice in the ABC News 100, with two of our key campaign executions reaching into the top ten. We also featured in the prestigious D&AD awards, winning gold, silver, and bronze awards.

#87 Days

In January 2015, we integrated our social media with other communications channels too, with successful submission, petition and fundraising campaigns driven from our Facebook page. Through strategic targeting, we’re now reaching new audiences through social media that we previously couldn’t reach.
Our in-house face-to-face fundraising program continues to acquire new regular givers and grows from strength to strength in our key areas of Melbourne and Sydney. Whilst many of our competitors have since abandoned making an internally staffed team profitable, we’ve not only managed to produce a significant return on investment, we’ve also retained and sponsored the professional development of high-performing staff in these positions. We’ve successfully transitioned 15 of these talented, spirited staff members into other roles across our organisation, with nine current staff members still employed in their new roles.

In January, we undertook a benchmarking and strategic review with More Strategic consultants. With their help, we evaluated our return on investment on all of our existing fundraising activities, and workshoped opportunities for the introduction of new, key fundraising initiatives. We spent the rest of the financial year rolling out some of these initiatives, such as taking steps to optimise our website for major donors.

There were two senior fundraising staff appointments in the second half of the financial year, to drive growth in current fundraising programs as well as develop and implement new initiatives. Tara Kelliher was appointed as our Supporter Retention Manager in March, primarily tasked with redesigning our membership product model and engaging our existing supporters. Scott Nicholson joined the team as Direct Marketing Manager in April, helming our face-to-face and digital acquisition channels, as well as optimising our cash appeals. These strategic changes stand us in good stead for continuing to build growth in supporter acquisition and retention in the 16/17 financial year.

Nimble and innovative

Engaging and building our supporter base.

Over the 15/16 financial year, we raised $770,914 through four fundraising appeals to 65,000 supporters, including four original mailings, four reminder mailings, and eight emails. On top of this, we raised $131,527 from two mailings of our supporter magazine, Wilderness News.

Cath Hoban
National Director of Membership and Fundraising

“Joining the team was a pretty simple choice for me. I’m passionate about social justice and social equity, and observed the role of industry and the resource-ringers at the root of this problem — and I knew I could be part of the solution. This year, we redeveloped the donation pages on our website to enrich the online user experience of our supporters, which resulted in industry recognition as the highest-performing example of digital best practice in Australia. Further to this success, the development of our online fundraising program has been a noteworthy milestone, now accounting for 11% of revenue, and is a critical initiative in diversifying revenue and being where many people now live and transact.”

Cath has retained her senior leadership position of National Director of Membership and Fundraising with us for seven years. Her experience and knowledge of fundraising is exemplary, acknowledged by the award of Fundraiser of the Year by Fundraising and Philanthropy Magazine Australia and New Zealand in 2009. She earned a Bachelor of Marketing and Economics from Swinburne University, and spent 10 years working with the Cancer Council of Victoria as the Events and Community Fundraising Manager. Cath spearheaded the development and launch of its pilot community fundraising event, Relay for Life, which was subsequently rolled out nationally and has since become an example of best practice event management for the fundraising sector. Her leadership and mentoring has resulted in a stable yet innovative fundraising department, raising a total of $89,096,141 during her tenure.
People and Culture

Driven by efficiency and innovation.

People and culture is at the very heart of who we are and what we do. That’s why we’re investing in a healthy and vibrant culture.

We’re managing people better by giving them the practical tools they need to perform to a high standard. In August 2015, The Wilderness Society Multi-Enterprise Agreement (MEA) was approved by the Fair Work Commission. The implementation of the Agreement was completed in December 2015, with all eligible staff now transitioning to its conditions. Through a revised performance conversation process, we completed a review of employee needs and developed an organisation-wide plan to deliver training and leadership development opportunities for performance improvement.

In terms of our operational systems, we’re continuing to innovate by exploring cloud-based applications to add to our Google-based network. Our long-term view is to implement smarter, faster systems that enable our staff to work nimbly from the field, wherever their work might take them. We’re increasing efficiency and performance whilst reducing administration and manual work.

Central to the broad success of our organisational culture is the development of a new customer relationship management system — named ‘Franklin’ in acknowledgement of our auspicious origins. The Franklin project provides the organisation with the required tools to enable the movement building strategy and reduce the system management requirement, all the while providing richer and more comprehensive data that can be leveraged for campaign, organising, fundraising and communications purposes. It replaces a number of legacy systems, such as our broadcast email tool and the current fundraising software. Franklin will go live by early 2017, breathing life into our integrated systems of knowledge.

• Producing emerging leaders (16 from development program so far)
• Empowering our leaders with coaching, mentoring and guidance
• Using SMART objectives to track and measure our progress
• Evolving our information technology governance
• Improving project management processes
• Implementing Franklin, our new customer relationship management system

Matt Brennan CPA
National Director of Operations

“When I was young, my imagination was captured by big, wild places like the Franklin and the coastal mountains of British Columbia. It cemented my love of nature and rugged wilderness. I was fortunate to get involved with The Wilderness Society at a time when I felt I had something both real and tangible to offer, and yet still a lot to learn about what our beautiful country needs. Over the past year, we’ve achieved some amazing wins — like commencing our community organising training program with a crowded room in Sydney, and releasing some very credible oil spill modelling for the Great Australian Bight. Governance reform, although not always a very exciting subject, has also seen us build a broad consensus for change. This year has brought fruit with the implementation of key changes to solidify our Board and provide access to all members to vote and participate in our organisation-wide decision-making.”

Matt graduated from the University of Technology in Sydney with a Bachelor of Business and Accounting in 1990 and is a Certified Practicing Accountant and has completed courses in leadership and transformational change. Prior to joining us in 2011, Matt worked for Brookfield Multiplex Ltd for 12 years, holding multiple senior national executive roles including Chief Financial Officer of Residential Property and Commercial Manager of Developments.

People and development highlights
Being open to change is a positive thing. That’s why we continue to strive for the most successful model to operate under as an organisation.

On 26 November 2015, the members of The Wilderness Society approved a new constitution and the decision to become a public company limited by guarantee. The primary aim was to provide a simplified structure and improve governance processes. These changes came about through external reviews and very broad consultation.

The change in structure was approved by the Australian Securities and Investment Commission on 9 March 2016, and the new governance and board structure combined the Committee of Management of The Wilderness Society Inc and The Wilderness Society Australia Board.

Key features of our new Constitution are:

- Three year terms for Directors, with one third of the Directors to resign or stand for re-election each year.
- Local entities are members, forming The Wilderness Society Group.
- An annual Members’ Forum to bring both Wilderness Society Group members and individual members together to share perspectives, plan and celebrate successes.

The Board is guided by a set of governance principles and a Board Charter, designed to facilitate collaboration and drive its operations. The Board also formed committees including Finance, Audit, Risk and Compliance; Governance; and People, Leadership and Culture. Each of these committees have work plans to deliver upon over the coming year.

These steps lay a foundation for developing a strong governance structure to empower our work as an organisation.

We’d like to take this opportunity to thank the inaugural Directors who have stepped down during the year: Life Member Michael Osborne, Joel Trigg, Louise Clifton, Laura Knight and Brigitte Smith.

Linda Selvey
The Wilderness Society Ltd
Board Convenor

“I first joined The Wilderness Society in 1987 to work on the wet tropics campaign as a volunteer. I was offered a platform to become very active in campaigning, fundraising and governance— which was a key factor in my development as an environmentalist. As an organisation, we all foster a very strong connection to our membership. Over the last year, implementing the new governance arrangements by becoming a limited entity was a huge achievement, and the culmination of a lot of work by a number of people across the organisation. It feels like a key milestone in the development of the organisation, and something that’ll help us become more coordinated, organised and influential than ever.”

An environmental activist since 1981, Linda cut her teeth working on the Vote for the Forest and Tully-Millstream campaigns. She’s worked in a senior leadership capacity in the Queensland Department of Health for many years, and has been involved with a number of environmental organisations, including ACF, Doctors for the Environment Australia, and the Climate Reality Project. Linda’s former roles of Chief Executive Officer of Greenpeace Australia Pacific, as a senior executive in Queensland Health and as Chair of the Queensland Conservation Council have provided a wealth of experience for us to tap into. Today she is Associate Professor in the School of Public Health at Curtin University in Western Australia.

Alice Graham
Supporter Care Representative

“My parents were founding members of The Wilderness Society and very committed to protecting Tasmania’s forests. I feel so proud to follow in my late mother’s footsteps and help protect our environment and climate for my children’s future. As the mother of two young children, I feel a great sense of achievement in working consistently through my Thursdays and Fridays on minimal sleep. I enjoy spirited conversations with our supporters, talking about environmental campaigns and helping them to find ways to continue supporting our work. I’ve attended many rallies and events over the years, volunteered to paint banners, carbon accounting—you name it! On top of being a member of our great organisation, I’ve worked as a Face-To-Face Fundraiser, Major Donor Assistant and now I’m a Supporter Care Representative. I love working here!”

Alice is a treasured and respected staff member who we’re very happy to have retained in multiple roles since 2001. Her experience talking to supporters about our work is invaluable to the organisation. Recently, Alice has excelled at inspiring lapsed supporters to reconnect with us by engaging with them over the phone about our latest campaign efforts, bringing an outstanding result in reactivated regular donations.
Financial Statements for The Wilderness Society Ltd.

Over the past few years, we’ve increased our financial resilience, enabling us to now invest in activities to deliver on our strategic intent. This financial year, we’ve rebranded and overhauled community organising, including a new strategy, training curriculum and embedding the disciplines by helping all staff graduate the program. We’ve funded a bold campaign targeting major oil interests in the Great Australian Bight and defending the natural habitat of its unique wildlife. And we’ve made a significant commitment to operational transformation by beginning the implementation of the Franklin project to completely revamp our natural habitat of its unique wildlife. And we’ve made a significant

Craig Zanker CA
Convenor of the Finance Audit Risk Compliance Committee

"Protecting and preserving the places that have amazed me in my adventures across Australia is what drives me to work in my voluntary role with The Wilderness Society. I have been lucky enough to live in Tasmania, the Kimberley, Ningaloo and now Victoria. All have faced threats to their amazing natural landscapes and ecosystems. Taking part in the community organising training program and hearing how many staff love doing what they do — and the fact that the entire organisation was invited to attend — was a fantastic highlight of the year for me. It’s motivated me to continue working through the 40M, governance changes and implementing new structures and systems. It doesn’t sound very exciting, but all of this work in the background will help us be as efficient and powerful as we possibly can to achieve our ambitious goals, and deliver on our promises to our highly-valued supporters.”

Craig is a Chartered Accountant and holds a Graduate Diploma in Corporate Governance, a Bachelor of Economics and a Bachelor of Commerce. He has over 15 years experience in management roles in finance, operations and governance departments within the for not-for-profit sector, and has also dedicated his time volunteering with conservation organisations. He currently holds the positions of Chief Operating Officer and Company Secretary for the Victorian Comprehensive Cancer Centre.

Reviewing and improving our organisational systems has allowed administrative and operating costs to be kept in check at $1.4M (2015: $0.14M). The fundraising market is increasingly competitive, due to our Total fundraising revenue has decreased to $11.3M (2015: $11.6M), while continuing to provide increased support to our long-term supporters.

Our increased expenditure on these important campaigns, investment in our organising strategies and capabilities, and $0.8M funded in the development of the Franklin project has resulted in a deficit for the year of $0.3M. We expect to repay and gain a return on the Franklin project within four years and it is critical to achieving our strategic plan and long-term theories of change.

Growing our financial resilience continues to be a long-term focus, and to achieve it we must invest deeply in our purpose and operational transformation.

Forever Wild

Leaving a gift in your Will is an everlasting way to make a difference in the world.

Bequests ensure that our campaign funding is secure and sustainable into the future. These important gifts provide stability and allow for long-term planning to keep us on our path to achieving our vision.

On behalf of the places and wildlife that need protecting, we’d like to thank the extraordinary people who have made a crucial difference by making a gift to Forever Wild in their Wills.
